

New Marking Scale and the European Baccalaureate

Ewa Rudomino

Head of European Baccalaureate Unit
Office of the Secretary-General of the European Schools

Luxembourg, 31st May 2018

Will the New Marking Scale affect pupils' university admissions?

- The European Baccalaureate is a highly recognized diploma, which is acknowledged by all the Member States of the European Union

- The introduction of a modern assessment culture will allow to the Baccalaureate to keep its reputation

Plans

- The Office of the Secretary General plans to organize communication towards the Member States to ensure that all the stakeholders have all the necessary information concerning New Marking Scale

- Information will be channeled through national authorities (such as ministries responsible for higher education) and universities themselves

Plans

- Early communication of the changes will allow the higher education authorities to better understand the nature of changes and to take required legislative actions

Plans

- Communication will be also done through newsletters and with the help of Career Guidance teachers
